

The Infant Pawn

The Judge ...

The Weatherspoons have ruled Dirkson County, South Dakota for four generations. Living up to the family legacy, Isaac Weatherspoon IV is sworn in as the youngest circuit court judge in county history. His ultimate goal is to be governor of South Dakota. In the meantime, “the Judge” uses the county as his personal playground and bullies the females of Clearwater into playing his games.

The widow ...

A recent widow, Rachel Tennison struggles to raise her twin daughters alone. She believes her troubles are over when she is hired by the Judge. The Judge knows what he likes and believes he is entitled to whatever he wants ... and he has his eyes on Rachel.

The law student ...

Jake Cooper, a second-year student at the University of South Dakota School of Law, temporarily leaves his life of classrooms, exams, parties and coeds to take a summer internship with the Judge. When he meets Rachel, he decides it’s time to give up his wild lifestyle so he can be with the most fascinating woman he has ever met.

The wife ...

In a defiant act against his father, the Judge had taken a Florida beach bunny as his bride and started the next generation of Weatherspoons. But with the Judge no longer interested, Cindy Weatherspoon is forced to raise Little Ike and Frankie without help from her inattentive husband. She turns to Jake for friendship, and soon decides she wants it to be more.

The children ...

The people of Clearwater see the Weatherspoon boys as fortunate sons, born with silver spoons in their mouths and futures all laid out for them. But what Clearwater residents don’t see is the possibility that Frankie may not live long enough to reap the rewards his ancestors bestowed on him.

The result ...

It all leads to a world of sexual harassment, controlling drugs, a deadly behavioral disorder, and murder.
